run from first to second floor. All interior doors and windows have wide architraves in a modified Greek style. Extra mouldings give the woodwork a slightly Gothic appearance.

Painted white with green shutters, the Barkman House is very unusual in its proportions and detailing. The combination of Greek and Gothic Revival design has been interpreted in such a fashion as to make the house highly unusual if not unique in the State of Arkansas. With the exception of the screening of the front gallery, the closed-in rear gallery, two or three changed doors and windows, and the asphalt shingle roof, the house is structurally the same as when it was built shortly before the Civil War.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Barkman House, completed about 1860, was built for James E. M. Barkman, the son of Jacob Barkman who had settled in Arkadelphia about 1811.

The house is architecturally significant because of its unusual combination of Greek and Gothic Revival styles. It is a transitional design between antebellum and Victorian architecture in Arkansas.

Gothic Revival architecture in Arkansas is very rare, particularly in anything resembling its pure form. Some early Victorian houses in Arkansas, built soon after the Civil War and into the 1870's, have certain features that are classified as Victorian-Gothic style. The Barkman House, however, was built about 1860. Because it has both Greek and Gothic inspired detailing, it is quite unusual in the State.

The floor plan of the Barkman House is typically antebellum. It has a center hall with rooms on either side, plus two rear wings. The exterior design is basically antebellum Greek Revival in style, including some of the detailing such as corner pilasters; but, it is with regard to the detailing that the house is typically Greek Revival, yet with an added decorative touch to the soffit that seems to be Gothic inspired. The front gallery is not a true Greek Revival portico in appearance, but rather it is an interesting and highly unusual combination of some Greek but mostly Gothic detailing, combined in such a manner that it appears to be of Victorian design rather than antebellum design.

The Barkman House, which is in very good condition structurally, has been quite well maintained both inside and out. The design as well as the craftsmanship represented in the combination of Greek and Gothic motifs make the Barkman House truly exceptional and outstanding. The house is imposing, but also graceful.
