Lewisburg was once a flourishing trade center on the Arkansas River. During a part of the nineteenth century it was the county seat of Conway County and contained many businesses and private homes. However, in the late 1870's when the Little Rock to Fort Smith railroad was completed and lay about one mile north of Lewisburg, the old town began to die. River traffic could not compete with the railroad, and merchants pegan leaving Lewisburg for the nearby depot at Morrilton.

By 1890 Lewisburg was a deserted town. According to a contemporary account, only two "pleasant and handsome residences" remained to show that Lewisburg was once a prosperous and thriving community. One of those houses, the Burrow-Cox House, still stands today as a link with the almost forgotten past.

In 1871 Colonel Hance Wesley Burrow built a beautiful home on the north edge of Lewisburg. Today the same home stands on its original site, north of the site of Lewisburg but within the south city limits of Morrilton.

The Burrow family exemplified the pioneer movement of many American families in the nineteenth century. Both the maternal and paternal grandparents of H. W. Burrow had moved from North Carolina to east Tennessee, and later, to west Tennessee. The westward move was continued by Burrow's father, Hiram Burrow, when he and all his family moved to Arkansas in 1858.

Born in west Tennessee in 1830, H. W. Burrow was reared on his father's farm. After several years of teaching school he married in 1857 and began farming. In 1858 Burrow moved west with his father to Arkansas, a journey Form 10-300a (July 1969) UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR NATIONAL PARK SERVICE which took almost three months. He bought some land in the Arkansas River Valley and began farming, but was soon interrupted by the Civil War.

During the Federal occupation of the Conway County area Mr. Burrow returned to Tennessee, where he stayed until the end of the Civil War. In August, 1865 he moved back to Arkansas to resume his farming operations. After being widowed for six years, Mr. Burrow remarried in 1871. In that same year he built his home on a five acre tract just north of Lewisburg.

The Burrow-Cox home, built by a moderately wealthy planter in the post-Civil War era, is representative of this lifestyle and this era in the Arkansas River Valley. Now owned by the Cox family and used as a children's school, the Burrow-Cox House is one of the last remaining links between Morrilton and the parent community of Old Lewisburg.
