Description

The Charley Passmore House is a one-and-one-half story, wood frame and masonry veneer residence designed in the Craftsman style. The rectangular, gable roof core of the house is augmented only by a gable end section that projects from its western elevation (a rear shed section and carport, on the southern and eastern elevations respectively, are later additions). An exterior end, cut stone chimney rises through the roof to the north of the western gable peak, and a smaller brick chimney rises through the southern slope near the western elevation. The composition shingle roof, and the cut stone and brick walls are carried upon a continuous stone foundation.

The northern or front elevation is composed of the single-story, full-width front porch that shelters the stone wall behind. The porch roof is supported upon a total of six combination brick/stone piers that are connected above with arched spandrels and below with a solid stone balustrade. The upper section of the piers is of the pyramidal form common to Craftsman-style buildings. The wall behind is accessed via a single-leaf entrance at near its western end and fenestrated with a single window to the west thereof and a pair of windows to the east. A central gabled dormer projects from the roof above; it is fenestrated with a pair of one-over-one wood sash windows. The southern elevation opposite is fenestrated with a row of wood windows in the shed roof section to the west and a pair of windows in the rear wall to the east.

The western elevation is composed of the porch to the north, the main gable end wall in the center and the lower, projecting gable end to the south. The main gable end is fenestrated with two small three-over-one wood windows flanking the chimney and a taller pair of wood windows in the gable peak above. The projecting gable end is symmetrically-arranged with two small pair of wood windows on the first floor and a taller vent opening in the peak above. The shed roof section at the southern end is lit with a row of three windows. The eastern elevation is composed of the northern porch and the gable end of the main house section. It is fenestrated with two pair of wood windows to the south and another pair in the peak above. The flat roof carport extends out over another pair of windows.

The significant exterior details are found in the pyramidal porch columns, the typical Craftsman three-over-one windows, and the arched porch openings.

With the exception of the rear shed and side carport additions, the Charley Passmore Home is unaltered and in good condition.

Significance

The Charley Passmore House, which attained its current appearance in 1938 (though the main structure of the house was probably built earlier) is one of the finest examples of a Craftsman house finished in stone and brick masonry. Though little is known about Charley Passmore, its builder and first resident, its construction date of 1938 and its clear Craftsman style represent the historic context Searcy County in the World War Era, 1910-1945: Economic Realignment, The Great Depression and World War. Though this was, generally speaking, a period of county-wide economic decline, some construction continued. With the long-standing presence of the railroad and the growing influence of the automobile, it was inevitable that new, national architectural styles would be reflected. As a particularly good example of the Craftsman style, and the most intact example in the community of Marshall, the Charley Passmore House is locally significant under Criterion C.
