National Register of Historic Places Continuation Sheet

Summary

Built in 1901, the Old Searcy County Jail is located just south of the courthouse square in Marshall, Arkansas. The two-story structure has a basic square floor plan and is constructed of locally-quarried sandstone. Barred windows, reinforced doors, and holding cells recall the building's original purpose, while the round-topped arch vent and masonry construction reflect its Romanesque style.

Elaboration

The structure's continuous cut-stone foundation is topped by four stone walls, into which a number of tall, narrow doors and windows are set. The top of each window is spanned by a cut-stone lentil while the bottom features a cut-stone sill. A lentil caps the top of each door as well. The pyramid metal roof, which was replaced in 1994, is topped with a cupola that houses louvered air vents. While the jail's east elevation borders Center Street, its front façade faces an alley to the north. The structure lies on the edge of the downtown commercial district, one block south of Main Street and the Searcy County Courthouse. It is in excellent condition, having undergone only a few alterations including the removal of four chimneys and other changes made to accommodate the installation of new utilities.

North Elevation

The front of the Old Searcy County Jail faces north. Its main feature is a shallow central projection topped with a dormer featuring a louvered, arched-topped vent. Centered on this projection are two windows, one on the first floor and one on the second. Two doors flank this projection on the first floor. The east door is completely original, with bars over the transom, while the west door has been altered to accommodate a new exterior wooden door and aluminum screen door. The bars over the transom are missing. A utility meter is mounted just to the left of the west door. On the second floor, two windows flank the projection. Only the first floor window is original, but all windows maintain their original bars.

West Elevation

There are a series of six windows on the west side of the old jail house, three on each floor. The center column of windows falls slightly to the right of center. The first floor windows are all original, but do not have bars over them. The central window now houses a window air conditioner, while the outer two have been covered with storm windows. The upstairs windows have all been replaced, but each maintains its original bars.

South Elevation

The back, or south side of the building has only a single door and window on the first floor. The window is original but is covered by an aluminum storm window. The door is sealed off with plywood. The single upstairs window is also blocked by plywood, but it retains its original bars.

East Elevation

The layout of the east elevation is essentially a mirror image of the west elevation. There are six windows—three on each floor—but on this side the center column of windows falls slightly to the left of center. All the windows on the first floor are original. The two southernmost windows are covered by aluminum storm windows, while the northernmost window retains its original bars. The upstairs windows have all been replaced but are covered by the original bars.

Interior

The interior of the building remains largely intact. Four rooms, a kitchen, living room, two bedrooms and a bathroom occupy the lower level. The painted plaster walls and the concrete floor are original. Ceiling tiles constitute the first-floor ceiling, which is lower than it was originally. A metal staircase leads to the jail cells on the upper level, where reinforced metal doors open into holding areas that contain little more than metal-frame bunk beds. This level also features a more secure holding cell encased with thick metal bars and riveted sheet metal. Like the first story, this second floor has painted plaster walls and a concrete floor, but it retains its original plaster ceiling.

The building was originally heated by wood stoves, as evidenced by its sealed flues and chimneys which can be seen in historic photographs. Today, a gas heater on the first level is the only heat source. Electrical conduit running down some of the interior walls indicates addition of electricity after the building's initial construction. This retrofitting of utilities also explains the lowered tile ceiling on the first floor.

Summary

Located on State Highway 27 (Center Street) in Marshall, Arkansas, the Old Searcy County Jail is being nominated to the National Register of Historic Places with local significance under Criterion A for its association with the establishment of law enforcement in Searcy County. It is also being nominated under Criterion C as a good example of architecture with Romanesque Revival influence. The building was built in 1902 and served as the Searcy County Jail until 1976. The Searcy County Historical Society has housed a museum in the structure in the past, but it is not currently being utilized.

Historical Background

The building, constructed in 1902, was built by Ben Henley Sr., Jim Eatherly, Tom Treadwell, T.J. Thomas, George W. Jackson and the foreman was John Smith. These contractors names appear over and over again throughout the history of Marshall, especially Eatherly and Jackson who were both contractors on the Searcy County Courthouse as well (National Register-listed October 12, 1976). The exterior is made of locally quarried sandstone from a site not far from the location of the structure, known as the old Kenneth Hubbard farm.

The Arkansas State Legislature carved present-day Searcy County from Marion County in 1838. Construction on the first county courthouse did not begin until the late 1840s at Lebanon, located on Bear Creek, five miles west of what is today Marshall. The structure, which also served as the jail, had log walls, a log floor, and even a log judge's bench.

In 1856 county officials decided to move the government to a more centrally-located site. They chose an area five miles east of Lebanon, platted it, and named it Burrowsville in honor of local citizen N.B. Burrow. Five years later, the new courthouse jail played an important role in a notable Civil War incident. Hearing of a significant population of northern sympathizers in Searcy County, the Confederate government in Little Rock ordered Colonel Sam Leslie to arrest anyone in the county loyal to the Union. Colonel Leslie placed seventy-eight suspects in the jail on charges of treason, later giving them a choice between volunteering in the Confederate army or standing trial for their crime. Most joined the army. As the Civil War came to an end, Union troops occupied the Searcy County courthouse and burned it to the ground in January 1864. They abandoned Burrowsville the following month.

The town was renamed Marshall in 1868, and was incorporated on January 13, 1884. According to an affidavit on file in the Circuit Clerk's office, the county courthouse burned at least twice during this postwar period, once in 1878, and again in 1886. In 1899 the county constructed a new courthouse of locally-quarried stone; this courthouse is still in use today.

At the turn of the twentieth century, Searcy County's jail was a two-story log structure. It was erected close to the location of the jail mentioned in this application, but further to the east and possibly south. It was a hot topic for discussion among the townspeople, because the county had trouble keeping prisoners from escaping from the jail. The Mountain Wave records the purchase of a more secure holding cell on December 10, 1897. "The steel cage has arrived, but doesn't have the appearance of what it was supposed to be. It should be thoroughly tested before being put in the Tombs and rejected if not entirely satisfactory. Six hundred dollars is too much to pay for a bird cage." Eventually, the townspeople decided to build a new jail of stone, and the old one was demolished. "The old county Bastile was razed to the ground this week, and a more modern structure will be erected on the spot. Oh, what memories cling around the old weather beaten stockade!" proclaimed The Mountain Wave on January 18, 1902. The timbers from the old jail were used in road construction throughout the county.

The county submitted a notice to contractors for construction of the new jail on December 7, 1901. Work commenced in January 1902 under the supervision of Sheriff B.A. Watts and was completed sometime around September. The low bidder was B.F. Henley of St. Joe with a bid of $16,475. Others that contributed to the workmanship of the building included Jim Eatherly, Tom Treadwell, T.J. Thomas, George W. Jackson and the foreman was John Smith. The jail was built of native sandstone quarried from the Kenneth Hubbard farm, not far from the jail itself. This site was also used to extract stone for the courthouse. Eatherly, Treadwell, and Thomas served as the stonemasons for both the jail and the courthouse.

The Old Searcy County Courthouse reflects the Romanesque Revival style, popular during the last two decades of the 19th century. Popularized by Boston architect Henry Hobson Richardson, Romanesque Revival influence appeared in some commercial buildings as early as the mid-nineteenth century, but did not become more broadly used until the 1870s. While examples of this style appear throughout the country, it is somewhat uncommon since large-scale masonry construction was often very expensive. Classic Romanesque structures are characterized by round-topped arches, rough-faced masonry construction, round towers topped with conical roofs, parapeted gables, and an asymmetrical façade. The Old Searcy County Jail represents a more vernacular form of this style, with rough-hewn native stone walls, a round-topped, arched louvered vent, and a parapeted gable. It has undergone little modification.

The men who worked on the courthouse were very active in their community. Both B.F. Henley and Jim Eatherly fought in the Civil War and Henley became particularly active in politics. George Jackson was known for his work constructing Marshall's first school, a structure of large hand-hewn logs with peg legs built in 1866. The building sat on the west side of the present Highway 27 and just North of the old Roller Mill Spring. Jackson was also instrumental in organizing Marshall's First Baptist Church not long after the Civil War, in an old log school building on the west side of Spring Street near the Marshall Cemetery.

The jail was used continuously until 1976, when the Retired Teachers of Searcy County leased the property from the county for a period of 50 years. For a brief time the organization housed a museum in the building, but it has not been used for several years.
