DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Both historically and architecturally the Walker-Knerr-Williams House is a tangible reminder of the nineteenth century. Its Georgian style with Victorian trim presents a serene and dignified face to the world and is harmonious in its blend of brick, stone and wood. The house was built in two stages, with the front section completed in 1872, and the stem section, giving the house its basic T-shape, completed in 1878.

From every aspect the house pleases the eye. The strong T-shape is accentuated by four chimneys. The two bay windows on the north and south elevations of the front portion of the house, the two storey front portico, and the long second floor south gallery are features which adorn the basic structure. The facade, with its balanced windows, doors and pillars, has a look of simple but genuine elegance. Bracketed cornice work and paired segmental arched windows are typical around the front portion of the structure.

Inside, the original ceilings are the same height as when they were built (14 feet in the front, 12 feet in the stem). The large rooms, graced with much natural light, remain much the same as when originally constructed. Interior features of special note are the pressed tin ceiling on the second storey gallery, and etched transom windows.

Though a few minor changes have been made to allow for twentieth-century comforts, there have been no major structural changes since the house was completed in 1878. Minor alterations in 1910 enclosed the lower south gallery and added a back stairway. The house remains in excellent condition.

The Walker-Knerr-Williams House, the Gregg House<sup>1</sup>, and Old Main on the University of Arkansas campus<sup>2</sup> have some important characteristics in common. W. Z. Mayes was the contractor for all three structures. The red brick used in each was locally produced from the same clay deposit and was fired by the same craftsman, John L. Kelton.

Some statistics on the Walker-Knerr-Williams House:

18 inch thick downstairs partitions
14 inch thick upstairs partitions
14 foot ceilings in the front section
12 foot ceilings in the stem section
8 fireplaces
7 double windows
4 chimneys
2 doors with bars and iron supports

Gregg House, Washington County, Arkansas. Added to the National Register on September 17, 1974.

<sup>2</sup>Old Main, Washington County, Arkansas. Added to the National Register on June 15, 1970.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Walker-Knerr-Williams House is a two-storey brick structure on the south slope of Mt. Sequoyah in Fayetteville, Arkansas. It is known in local and state historical circiles as the old Walker House, and more recently, as the Walker-Knerr-Williams House.

In 1872 Judge David Walker built the front portion of the T-shaped Georgian structure for his daughter Mary and her husband, James David Walker (no relation). The stem portion of the house was finished in 1878. The Walker family lived in the house for thirty-six years.

Judge David Walker came to Arkansas from Kentucky in 1829. Though affiliated with the Whig party, neither his political activities nor judicial activities were curtailed in Democratic Arkansas. In 1836 Walker was a leading member of the group which formed the first Arkansas constitution. Four years later, Walker was elected to the State Senate. His activities in the Senate led to his election as Associate Justice of the State Supreme Court in 1848.

Following the Civil War, during which time he served in a Confederate military court, Judge Walker was elected Chief Justice of the Arkansas Supreme Court. He was ousted by the Reconstruction government, but was elected again in 1874 and served until his death in 1878.

Judge Walker's son-in-law, to whom he gave the house on East Mountain, was James David Walker. Born in Kentucky in 1830, J. D. Walker moved to Arkansas in 1847, and was admitted to the bar three years later. During the Civil War he served as a colonel in the Confederate infantry, and was captured and imprisoned for two years. Following the war he resumed his law practice in Fayetteville. In 1879 J. D. Walker was elected to the United States Senate and served one full term. Declining to seek re-election, he returned home and practiced law until his death in 1906. Like most of the Walker families, he was buried in the Walker family cemetery, located about one-half mile north of the house and adjacent to the Confederate cemetery.

In 1910 the George Frederick Knerr family from lowa bought the Walker House and lived there for fifty years. During that time two Knerr daughters were married in the house. Eventually one Knerr granddaughter was married in the house, and in 1960, returned to live there with her family, the Franklin S. Williams family.

The Walker-Knerr-Williams House is quite similar to the Lafayette Gregg House in Fayetteville. Both structures are of two storey red brick construction with two storey wooden porticos and paired ornamental brackets. A third structure, Old Main on the University of Arkansas campus, was built by the same contractor and with the same type brick as the Gregg and Walker houses. Other exceptional features of the Walker-Knerr-Williams House are the paired and bay windows, arched entry ways, and the second storey gallery on the south elevation.

The Walker-Knerr-Williams House is significant both architecturally and as the home of one of Arkansas' most important political families in the nineteenth century.
