Description

During the Boom and Bust Era (1914-1939) in White County a variety of vernacular houses were constructed. They were also built out of a variety of materials. Surviving examples from this period, however, are somewhat limited. The Prince House is a good example of a one-story double-pen house that is of box construction and clad with board and batten siding. The gable roof is covered with corrugated metal and the entire structure rests on stone piers.

Located on the west side of County Road 68 one-quarter mile south of County Road 350, this building was constructed approximately two miles northwest of the crossroads community of Velvet Ridge. The Prince House was constructed c. 1920 and is in fair condition. Its main, or east elevation is dominated by a porch that stretches the full length of the facade. The shed roof is supported by simple wooden posts. Two single symmetrically placed doors access this porch. Fenestration of the original house consists of single symmetrically arranged four-over-four double-hung wood sash windows. A small brick chimney rises from the gable peak in the center of the structure. The portion of the house on the west elevation with the shed roof appears to be original because it has the same type of windows and wall covering as the rest of the structure. It is unclear if the small porch found on the southwest corner of the building is original. It is, however, accessed by a single door and fenestrated with a single window. These are symmetrically arranged. A corrugated metal wall has been added to the south elevation of this porch, partially enclosing it.

Significance

When this building was constructed, c. 1920, it was one of numerous double-pen houses built of box construction during the Boom and Bust Era (1914-1939). Although there are seventy-six of these structures extant in the county, few exhibit the amount of integrity found in this house. Therefore, the Prince House is significant for its contribution to the study of vernacular architecture and is being nominated under Criterion C with local significance.
