Revival style of architecture. It is designed on an essentially square plan with a small projecting rear "t" that serves as a loading dock. The entire structure is encircled with a limestone cornice band.

The north, or front, facade centers around twin wooden doors topped by a transom and located in the center of the facade; they are flanked by simple wooden Doric columns inset in the brick facade. The door arrangement is topped by a dentil course. The frieze band between the dentil course and transom has adhesive letters attached reading: DEWITT AR 72042/221 W CROSS ST. Two eight-over-twelve, double-hung windows flank the door assembly on each side; they are topped by a limestone lintel, as are all full-sized windows in this structure. A set of concrete steps lead down from the front of the door; they feature a simple metal railing. Twin lamps flank the door assembly. A handicap-access ramp runs below the eastern pair of windows. A sunken area below each pair of windows provides basement window access. Each side in the sunken area, which is bisected by the stairs, features twin six-over-six, double-hung windows.

Continuing around the western facade of the building, heading from north to south, the building is fenestrated with an eight-over-twelve, double-hung window; a four-over-four, double-hung half window; a blank, brick-filled, recessed area; another half window; another eight-over-twelve window; and a final half window within another recessed brick area. Steps at the northern edge of the facade lead to a recessed area with twin six-over-six windows flanking a door with a twelve-pane window and a three-pane transom. An additional recessed area with a six-over-six, double-hung window lies below the southernmost eight-over-twelve window.

The rear, or south facade, from west to east, features a four-over-four, double-hung half window; two eight-over-twelve, double-hung windows, a projecting loading dock enclosed on the east side with an L-shaped brick wall; a door leading onto the loading dock, and two more eight-over-twelve windows. The two-story chimney rises above the eastern edge of the loading dock, and a small wooden shed is built onto the eastern wall of the loading dock.

The eastern facade is fenestrated from south to north with four eight-over-twelve, double-hung windows. A recessed area below the second to the southernmost window is fenestrated with a six-over-six, double-hung window. The handicapped access ramp forms a switchback beneath the northernmost

State significance of property, and justify criteria, criteria considerations, and areas and periods of significance noted above:

SUMMARY

The DeWitt Post Office is associated with the historic context Arkansas Post Offices with Section Art as a U.S. Postal Service structure containing a mural financed through the U.S. Treasury Department's Section on Fine Arts. As such, it is eligible under Criterion A with statewide significance for its associations with the Section's efforts to employ Depression-era artists and place art in post offices around the country.

ELABORATION

In late 1937, the U.S. Congress approved a $70 million emergency construction fund appropriation to finance the building of post offices around the country. Among the projects was a $75,000 appropriation to build a new post office in DeWitt, the county seat for the southern district of Arkansas County in southeast Arkansas. The proposed site for the new post office was surveyed in November of 1937, but the first round of bids were rejected in December of 1938. The February 2, 1939, DeWitt Era-Enterprise announced that the successful candidate in the second round of bidding was H.A. Ivry of Atlanta, with a low bid of $50,350. The article said the first floor would house the county extension service and other agencies, and "there will also be quarters for the janitor and special private offices for the post master and his assistant." Work began soon after.

On January 8, 1940, Treasury Department Fine Arts Section assistant chief Edward B. Rowan wrote William Traher, a Denver, Colorado, artist offering a $750 commission to execute a mural for the DeWitt facility "on the basis of competent designs submitted in the 48-State Mural Competition." Traher responded four days later that he was "delighted with the opportunity to decorate" the new building, adding that he would visit the town to "make sketches, study the locality." The plan met the approval of Rowan, who wrote "we find in dealing with the public that such works of art have more meaning if the subject matter is related to or reflective of the locale."

Traher went to DeWitt in May of 1940. He wrote Rowan on May 14 that "I have come here with no preceived ideas, preferring to find what I need in subject material and inspiration in this locality. When this is done, I'll return to Denver and put this material into mural form." He ended up living in DeWitt for three weeks.

In a remarkable July 5, 1940, letter to Rowan, Traher outlined his vision for the mural to be titled "Portrait of Contemporary DeWitt." The letter illustrates not only the artist's visions, but some of his prejudices as well.

Traher wrote that DeWitt "is a placid place -- more so than most small towns because it is southern, more so than most southern towns because it is in Arkansas. ... Even the dogs respect this mood, 'ah do decleah'. ... No dramatics, no sweeping rhythms, struggling forms, nor violent contrast of design belong in a portrait of DeWitt. The extremely literal minded citizens will fail to understand and resent obvious distortion or simplification.

"I chose the three panel form only after experimenting with many others. Each panel is a composite one, combining elements of several viewpoints. They represent: left, the negro quarter; center, the rice fields in flood; right, residential section. Long lines of washing everywhere is characteristic of 'Darktown.' The pigs feeding beneath a rose bush is a clue to the character of the place -- and the race. Wells for flooding the rice fields are shown in the central panel, and in the extreme distance, the towers and smoke of our country's biggest rice mill. The right panel contrasts the town's handsomest and most historic house [the Halliburton House, NR 11/05/74] with the old barn, woodpile and Jersey cow to be found in every back yard. It also suggests the town is a good place to raise children."

Rowan replied on July 10 that Traher's "explanation of the selection of subject matter and approach is entirely logical and I am pleased to tell you that the designs were regarded as extremely interesting by the members of the Section." A formal contract was issued on July 15, 1940, for production of the mural. The only change from Traher's original plan was that vehisote replaced a hard wood base as the "canvas" for the murals "since this office has no guarantee that the latter will not warp unless thoroughly cradled." Traher's preliminary design was approved on October 9, and he received his first payment of $150 on October 21. The Section approved the full-sized cartoon of the proposed panel on January 13, 1941, and the artist received a $250 payment on January 25.

On April 23, 1941, Traher wrote Rowan that he had installed the mural and "the whole town has agreed that it's 'pretty.' More sophisticated critics might have better words to describe a work of art they like, but would not know how to be more pleased or appreciative. ... They have paid me their highest compliment in sparing me that sly ridicule for which these Arkansas people are famed and feared -- that ridicule for things pretentious and artificial." The DeWitt Era-Enterprise, in a May 1, 1941, article, said simply: "These murals are fine specimens of workmanship."

Traher's final payment of $350 was approved May 23, 1941. Though the artist went on to complete murals for Cole Junior High School in Denver and Williams Field, Arizona, "Portrait of Contemporary DeWitt" was his only Section commission for a post office facility.

The DeWitt Post Office is associated with the historic context Arkansas Post Offices with Section Art as a U.S. Postal Service structure containing a mural financed through the U.S. Treasury Department's Section on Fine Arts.

As such, it is eligible under Criterion A with statewide significance for its associations with the Section's efforts to employ Depression-era artists and place art in post offices around the country.
