DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Watson-Sawyer House, built in 1870, is a two-storey wooden structure. It is of rectilinear shape and has a gable roof. As to architecture, the house is best described as an eclectic "provincial" style.

The Watson-Sawyer House is symmetrical and well-balanced. The facade features a centered two-storey portico supported by fluted Doric-capital columns. The pediment of the portico features ribbon-like woodwork, which terminates at the drop point of the pediment. Similar ribbon-like wood trim decorates the pediments of the gable ends. Pairs of windows with original shutters flank the portico on both the first and second-storey levels. Simple molding surrounds these windows. In keeping with the balance of the house, exterior-end chimneys project from each gable end. The front entry features double-paneled doors on both first and second-storey levels. These doors are surrounded by sidelights and a multi-light transom.

A wide frieze surrounding the house is marked by paired brackets. These brackets feature drop pendants and give the house a distinctive aura.

The interior plan of the Watson-Sawyer House is organized as a large central hallway with one room on either side. A single flight, one-run stairway of walnut extends from the downstairs hallway to the second-storey. The stairway features turned balusters. Mantles in the two downstairs in the two downstairs parlors are elaborate in design, while those on the second storey are plain. On the first floor the rooms feature paneled wainscot and decorative cornice. The original oak floors remain.

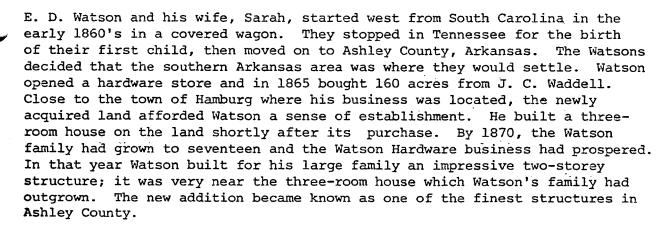

In 1949 a one-storey addition was built onto the rear elevation. In 1961 the original square porch columns were replaced with fluted columns taken from an older house in Hamburg - - an older house which was being razed.

The Watson-Sawyer House radiates an air of southern elegance as it rests on a large piece of land, carefully landscaped. This significant Ashley County structure remains in excellent condition.

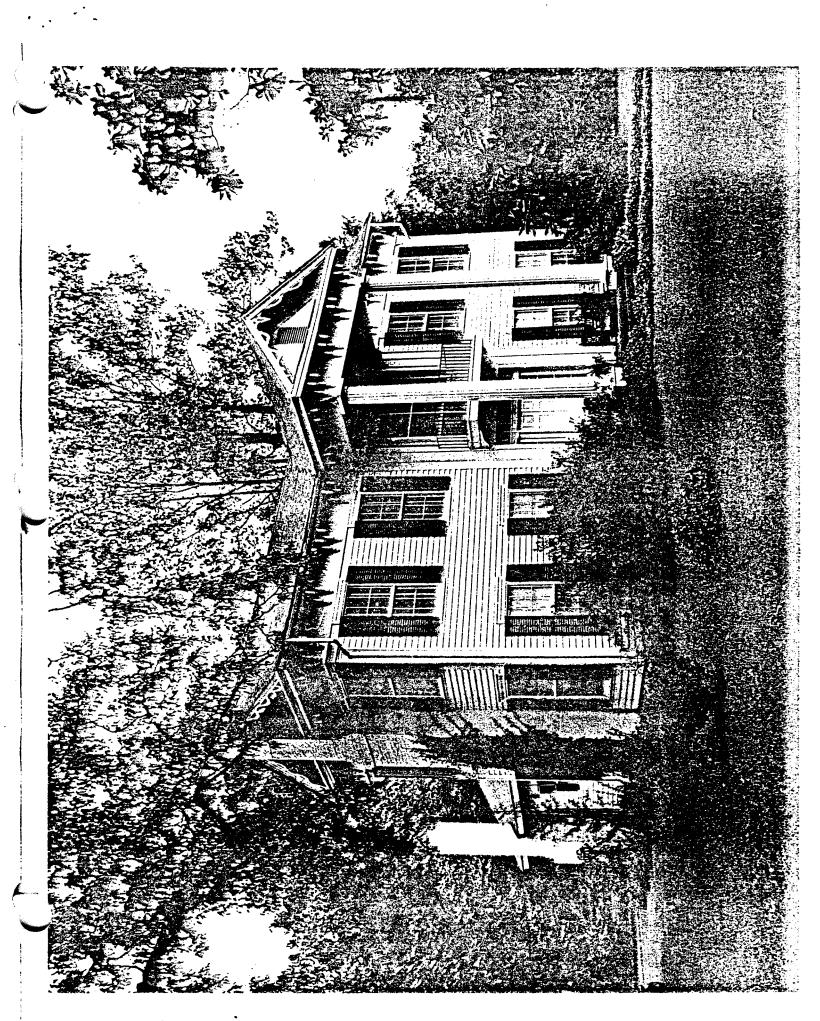

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Located in the southeastern Arkansas town of Hamburg, the Watson-Sawyer House rests on a tree-shaded lot near the downtown area. Built in 1870, the house is constructed entirely of oak. The primary significance of the Watson-Sawyer House lies in its architecture, which is best characterized as "provincial" style. The two-storey structure is symmetrical and well-balanced, with its center portico flanked by pairs of windows on either side and paired decorative brackets on the cornice. The role the Watson family has played in the area also lends significance to the house. As one of the early settlers in Hamburg, E. D. Watson played an important role in the development of the community.

The Watson-Sawyer House has never been out of the Watson family. It is now owned and occupied by a granddaughter of E. D. Watson. Undoubtedly this background of ownership and occupancy has contributed to the house being in such an excellent state of preservation today.
