The following is extracted from the report Historic Buildings of Arkansas, by A. Edwin Kendrew, James R. Short, Henry A. Judd and John L. Ferguson. This report resulted from a tour, made by the men listed above, to visit historic sites and structures in Arkansas, in October of 1968. The tour was made at the request of Governor Winthrop Rockefeller.

POTTS INN

"We were much impressed and pleased to see such a fine example of mid-nineteenth-century construction on an imposing site and in such a fine state of preservation. The fact that the descendants of the original builder have continued to live in the house to the present time has resulted in better care than usually befalls such a structure.

An inspection of the exterior of the main house made it obvious that this structure was a close counterpart of similar structures built in the 1820's and 1830's in the Piedmont Valley of Virginia and Kentucky. This close similarity made it obvious that Mr. Potts wished to have a house equal to the finer houses being built in the years preceding its construction.

Perhaps the most outstanding features are the four enormous outside chimneys, three of which were of brick construction and one of local stone. The last was extremely well built and presented a handsome appearance, although it was rather puzzling why one chimney would have been made of stone and the others of brick. It was interesting to note also that the stone chimney had a method of construction quite similar to that used largely in the northern part of Arkansas. It seemed to the committee that this chimney could serve as an example of the type of masonry construction prevalent in this area and that it might serve as a good prototype when repairing or constructing chimneys of this kind elsewhere.

We were told that formerly there were numerous outbuildings on the lot, including stables, coach-houses, lumber houses, corn cribs, milk houses, cooling houses, etc. Only two of these remain: a small log structure which might have been a corn crib and appeared to have been built with materials salvaged from other buildings; the well, under a canopy, had a very interesting windlass arrangement for raising the bucket, which might have dated back to the original period, although parts of the structure beside and over the well apparently had been rebuilt in later years.

The breezeway to the outside kitchen is also of later construction, but could be removed. Although the old kitchen has suffered more alterations than other parts of the house, most of the original elements seem to be there.

7. DESCRIPTION, CONTID

Inspection of the interior revealed the house to be of unusually large proportions, and the four-square plan, with rooms approximately twenty feet square, separated by a generous-sized hallway and stairway, indicated a desire on the part of the original builder to not only provide ample space for his family but to erect a structure that would be a credit to his community and would reflect the success which he apparently met with in the gold fields of California. We were also pleased to see that almost all of the original features of the house were intact and that there had been very little alteration in the general size of the rooms. Furthermore, the installation of gas for heat, and electric wiring, had been made in an exposed manner which did not destroy any of the original construction--as is so often the case. These installations, and the few alterations which had been made, could easily be removed, so that the original condition of the house could be easily restored."

The Potts' Home is one of the best preserved ante-bellum structures in Arkansas. This fine example of pioneer architecture has stood for over a hundred years as a tribute to its builder, Kirkbride Potts.

Kirkbride Potts was born and educated in Pennsylvania. He went to Missouri as a youth. He lived there for a few years and then came to Arkansas in 1828. He bought 160 acres of land from the United States as soon as this land in the Arkansas Territory was open for settlement. This was made possible by a treaty with the Cherokees in 1828. The land on which the present house now stands has been in the Potts family for 151 years. A Potts has always lived in the home.

When Potts came to Arkansas he built a two-story log house for his bride, Permelia Allison Logan, on the 160 acres on Galla Creek at the foot of Crow Mountain.

Here he prospered and eleven children were born. He made three trips to California. The first in the Gold Rush, the later trips with herds of cattle. All trips seemed profitable and he decided after his first trip to build a more fitting hore for his large family. Slaves cut timber and hauled it with oxen to Cagle's Mill, north of what is now Russellville, to be cut into timber. Slaves also made brick for the masonry and did most of the work of tuilding. It required six years from the time the timber was cut until the building was completed. All lumber was dressed by hand and marks of the plane bits are still in evidence.

The Potts' House was on the feaths to Fort Smith stage route and soon became one of the stops where the passengers could rest and be fed. This led to the building 'sing called Potts' Inn, and the stop Pott's Station. A pottation was established here with Kirkbride pots as the postmaster. The first a stoffice designation was Potts' Station, but this was later sharped to Pottsville.

In 1873 the stageouach was replaced by a train whose tracks ran to the north of the old stageouch bute. In 1878 Kirkbride Potts died in the house which had been bus puide ._
